In Australian conditions, air-conditioning is often considered a necessity

In Australian conditions, air conditioning is often considered a necessity, not a luxury. When you consider that staff productivity rises and falls with the level of comfort, air conditioning and refrigeration become investments relative to your project. Whether you're fitting out an entire mine camp, a large commercial property or a single residential dwelling, we can provide the right solution.

Our commitment to high quality service provision, safety and timely service delivery ensures that your project is in safe hands. This is reflected in the contracts that Airlec are proud to maintain including, supply and maintenance of air conditioning systems for key mining camps, maintenance of approximately 150 government schools, as well as maintenance for a large cross section of properties for some of Australia's largest property management companies, such as LJ

Hooker, The Professionals, and Raine & Horne. In short we have repaired everything from single wall plugs to switchboards in 50 storey skyscrapers.

Our team has broad experience fitting and maintaining systems and can ensure you get the result you want - on time, every time.
